

Neo-dada Mudflat

It started as an art argument on San Francisco Bay shores 10 years ago. Today, it's a freeway institution.

Each day thousands of commuters bound for San Francisco and Oakland are treated to the unlikely spectacle of a mass of wild and delicate "sculptures" of driftwood, old tires, metal and plastic cans, discarded ties and broken toys, on the Emeryville mudflats.

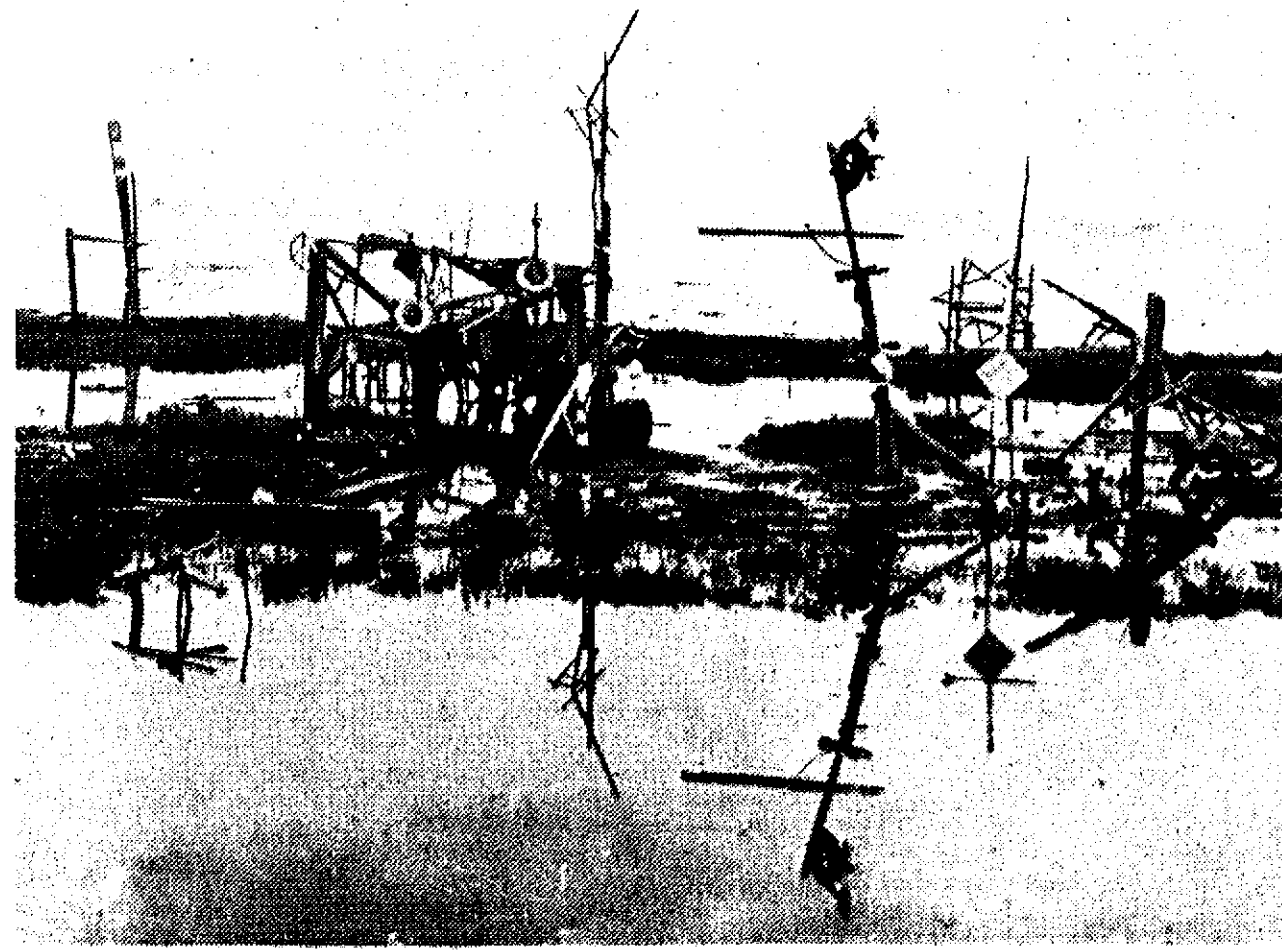

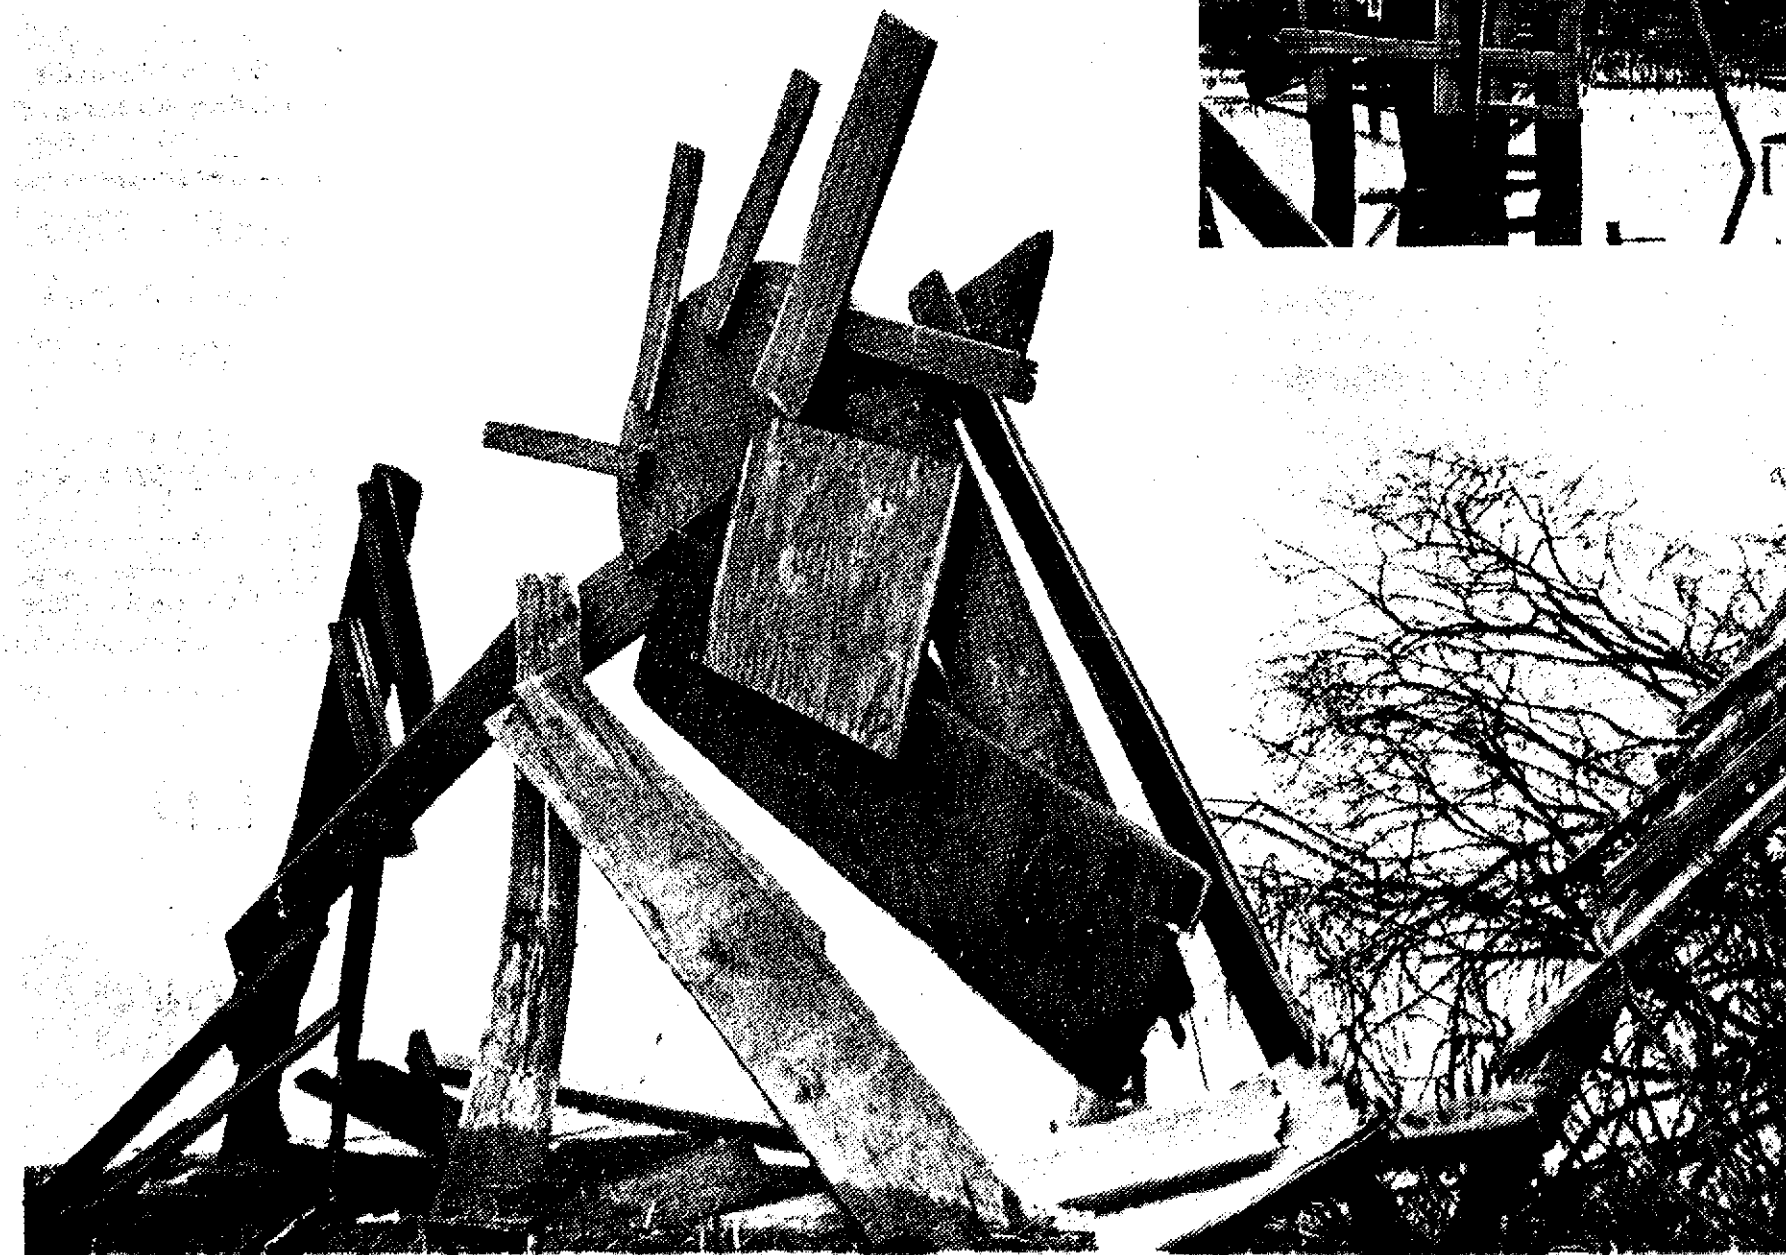

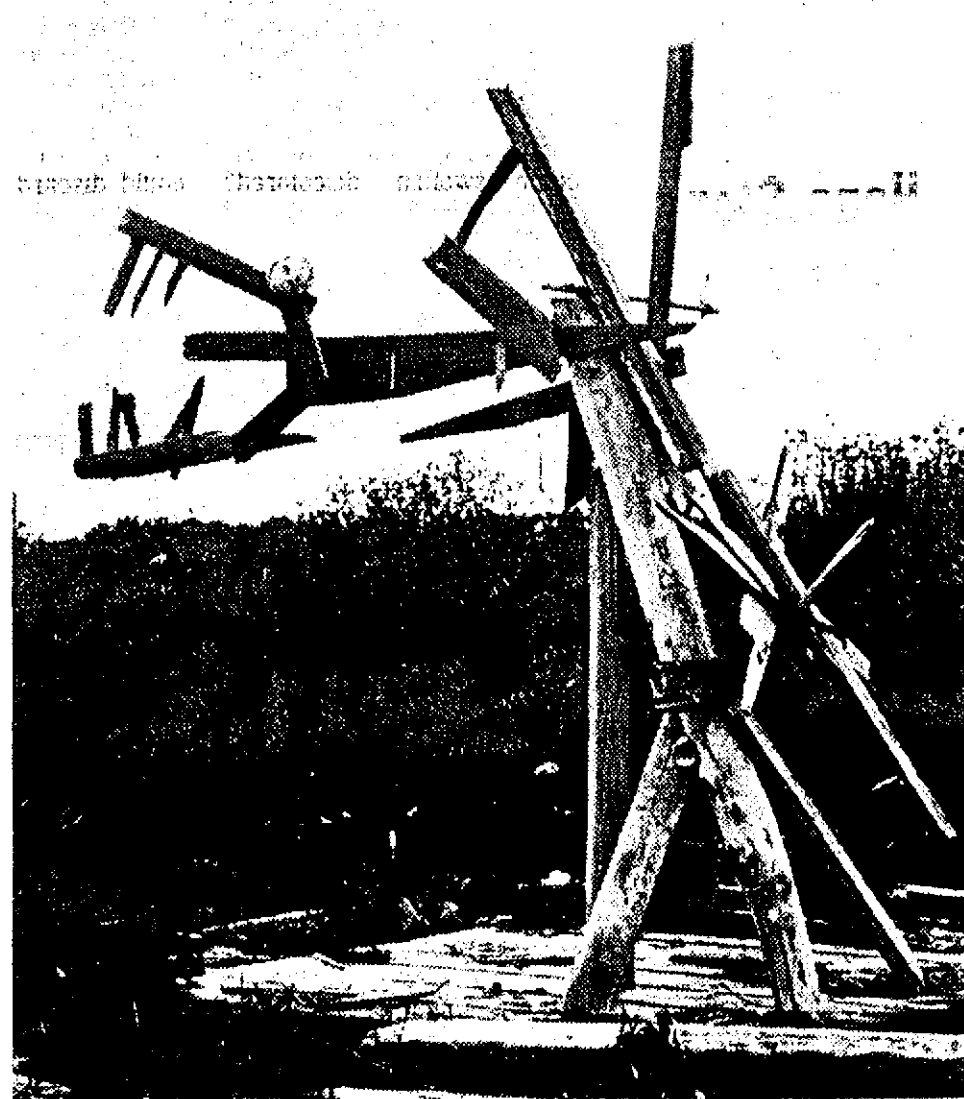

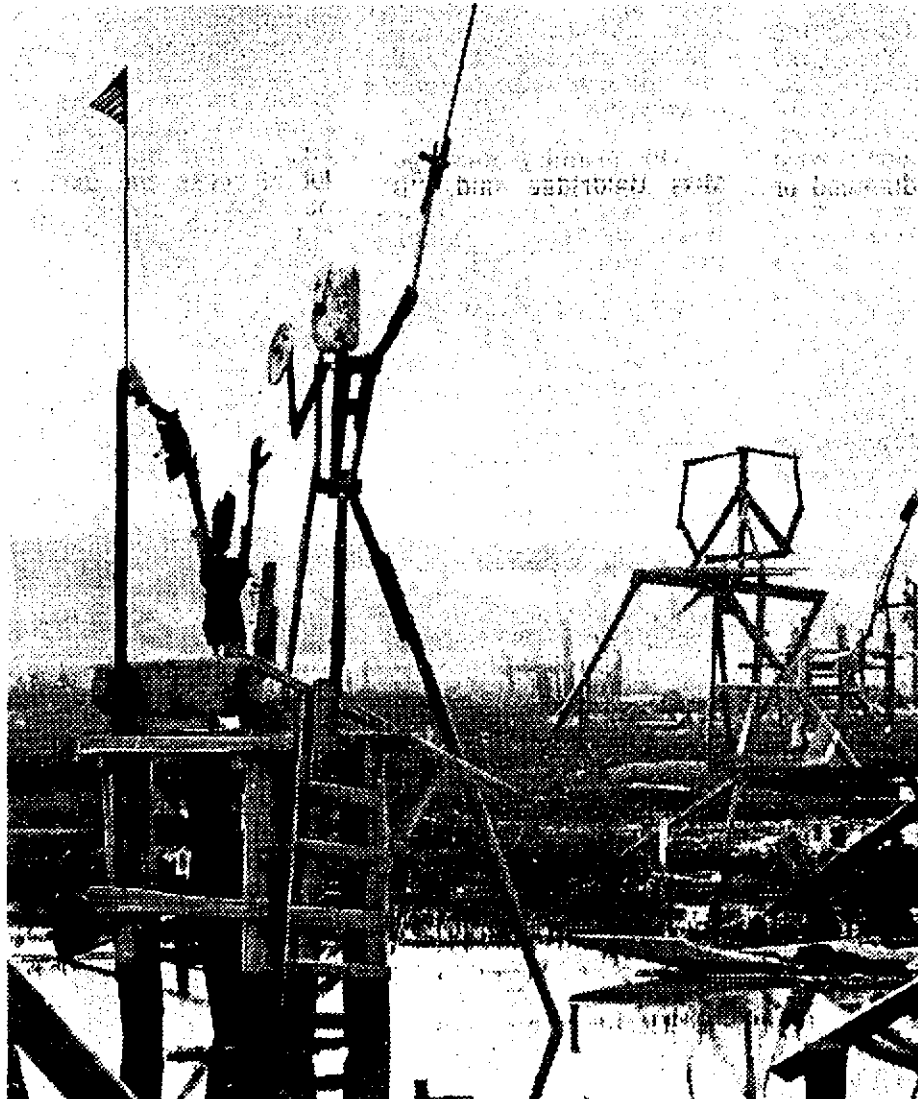

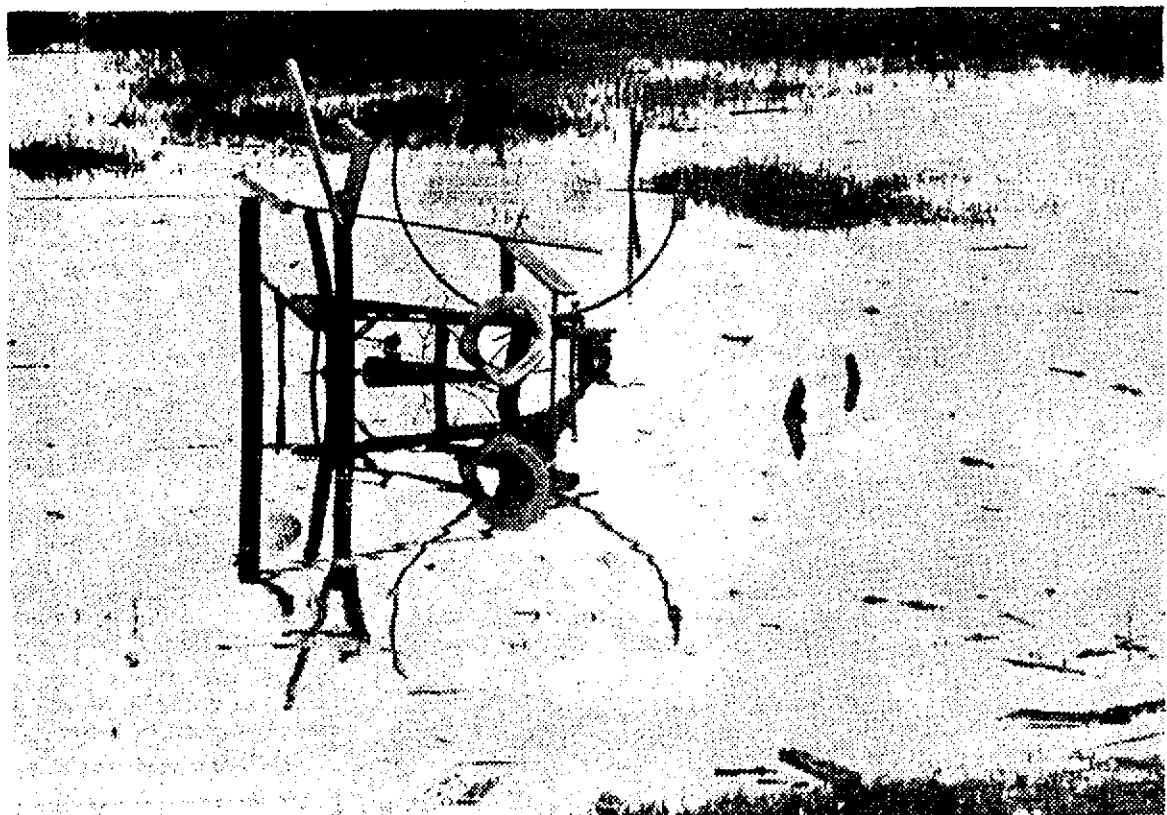

About a decade ago there was lively debate at an Oakland art school, about the merits of "neo-dada"—variously described as junk art or true art. And the style was demonstrated in a weird and wonderful construction which took shape on Bay Farm Island.

Pictures of that shoreline enterprise prompted an Oakland painter to try his version of the art form, on the Emeryville mudflats. He reasoned, correctly, that an unlimited supply of material would be found there: debris is washed up by the sea, and two rivers, the Sacramento and San Joaquin, which empty into San Francisco Bay.

The painter worked alone at first. He completed seven or eight pieces—which he termed non-objective abstractions. This sparked off creative urges in other anonymous sculptors, and soon the shore was dotted with eye-catching designs.

The original abstractions evolved into social protest themes—against the bomb, the Vietnam war, among others. Anyone and everyone was free to join in. And they did, from housewives to at least one entire grammar school class. The photographs on this Picture Show page will give you some idea of the resultant art scene. Perhaps the world's first and only free, spontaneous, open-air museum of contemporary found-art sculpture? The philistines, alas, will still call it junk.

YOUR DENTAL HEALTH

Self-evaluation of your dental health may save your life. Interrupt your headlong rush through life long enough to look at yourself. Has that bump on your neck gone away? What about the sore on your lip that heals but keeps coming back? How about that feeling, odd, numb feeling you get in your chin every once in awhile?

Be alert for signs and symptoms that are different from normal for you. Does your tongue get sore often? Has your denture suddenly begun to fit poorly? Or difficult or painful to wear? Has your mouth suddenly become dry? Have your gums become swollen, discolored? Do they bleed at the slightest touch?

This is not meant to frighten you. Rather it's to make you worry more about your dental health. Possible embarrassment of being called a hypochondriac should not preclude your concern about health, or seeking proper medical and dental advice and care.

The lump in your throat when you swallow, the occasional pain in your jaw, the swollen, rubbery bump in your neck, or the hard fixed, enlarged gland on the side of your face, could be due to chronic inflammation, or worse, could be a malignancy.

Six-month checkups aren't enough. Disease doesn't wait to develop at 6-month intervals, or 3-month intervals. Be your own dental health detective, and report clues to your dentist.

HELEN HELP US!

by Helen Bottel

MARRIAGE ISN'T FOR EVERYONE

Dear Helen: Is there a rule I've missed that says a person MUST get married? I often hear kids of four or five say, "When I grow up and get married, I'm going to be..." almost as if marriage was a prerequisite to gaining adulthood, or at least adult status in society. Let's face it, marriage has become something that if you don't achieve, you will wind up a dried-up old maid or a dirty old man in the eyes of your associates.

But marriage isn't for everyone, I mean, the only logical reason for a high divorce rate is a high marriage rate. Seems to me you aren't a failure if you remain single, but only if you jump into a partnership that is bound to fail because you acted in desperation. — NOT FOR ME

Dear N.F.M.: Good thinking! But when that certain person happens along—whose love will forevermore protect you from loneliness—your thoughts may change.—H.

Dear Helen: Whatever happened to the fellow who first invented the phrase, "Don't trust anyone over 30"? And is the generation gap really that great? — TWO

QUESTIONS

Dear Two: Jack Weinberg, who says "that phrase" was his "absurd answer to an absurd question," turned 30 on April 4, 1970.

We are always looking for hands for the column and ask our friends to send them to us when they find one. In line with this request Curtis Cook of Birmingham, Ala., wrote recently: "The best hand I have seen for some time appeared in your column on Sept. 30, 1967."

Then he takes us to task for incomplete analysis and points out some really brilliant defense and dummy play possibilities.

When played, South went down by winning the first diamond: cashing the three top spades in order to discard his diamond deuce, ruffing a diamond back to his hand and leading the king of trumps. East took his ace and led a low club to his partner's king. A club back to the ace followed by the lead of the 10 of spades made it impossible for South to shut out West's 10 of hearts.

We suggested that a better play would have been to lead the fourth spade from dummy and discard a club. Curtis points out that West could discard his 10 of clubs at that point whereupon East could lead ace and another club. South would ruff and lead his king of trumps whereupon a third club lead by East would set up the 10 of hearts as the setting trick in the same manner.

Curtis points out that South should make the hand against any defense by discarding a club on the third spade and his last club on the fourth spade. West could discard a diamond or a club on his partner's 10 of spades but there would be no way for East to get around to leading a suit that West could ruff. South would simply ruff low each time he got a chance and eventually pick up the 10 of hearts to make his contract.

TODAY'S QUESTION

Your partner continues to one no-trump. What do you do now?

Answer Monday

James Buchanan was the first bachelor elected president and the only one to remain unmarried.

He launched it back in 1965 during the Free Speech Movement at Berkeley. When a newspaper reporter asked him if "outside adults" were masterminding the program, Weinberg reports, "That made me kind of mad because of the old 'Communist conspiracy' implication, so I said the thing about not trusting anybody over 30. I didn't mean it then and I mean it even less today."

Advanced age has not led Jack into the Establishment meat-chopper. "I'm still going to be a revolutionary," he says.

Second question: "Generation gap" is another popular phrase blown up out of all proportion. "Idea gap" seems more accurate, for there are as many older people who relate to the young, as there are young people who reject the leadership of their radical peers.

America is polarized, divided, splintered not so much by age as by fear and distrust... of war, the economy, politicians, Communism, race, poverty, crime—you name it and somebody will surely start a movement, which may or may not turn into a riot.

I look to the day when the Three R's: Race, Riot, and Revolution will give way to concern over the Three P's: Pollution, Population (and its by-product, Poverty) and Peace. Then, the generation gap will be a forgotten term.—H.

Forget Your 'Thing' in Office

By HELEN HENNESSY
NEA Women's Editor

NEW YORK—(NEA)—If the midi takes over come fall, it may be a boon for business. The bookkeeper who credited when he should have debited because little Susie across the office showed so much leg will put his figures in the right columns once more.

But, meantime, there's a long, hot summer ahead when the midi won't be much in evidence. And many a determined Susie won't accept the midi this fall, either. So, many firms have become interested in some way to educate employees on what is proper, yet fashionable, office attire.

One source of help is a motion picture called "The Fashion-Right Summer." It's only 18 minutes long and is narrated by Letitia Baldridge, director of consumer affairs for Burlington Industries.

"Tish" Baldridge, author of "Diamonds and Diplomats," has a background that gives her the authority to speak frankly on attire for the working girl. She served as social secretary at the White House and as head of the First Lady's secretariat during the Kennedy administration. She worked for Clare Boothe Luce when Mrs. Luce was our ambassador to Italy. She was the first woman executive at New York's Tiffany & Co. And when she opened her own public relations firm in Chicago, banks and investment companies called on her to lecture and shape up their women employees.

"But my real credentials for spearheading this film," she said, "are my love of fashion and the fact that I have worked all my life since I graduated from college."

The film uses working girls as well as professional models to include women of a wide range of age, type and figure. Most of the fashions shown cost under $20, so that they fall within the budget of office girls.

"The primary message," Miss Baldridge said, "is: Don't distract in an office. When overdone, anything will distract."

"What girls should understand," she continued, "is that it's fine to do your own thing—but do it on your own time."

Some of her examples of don'ts on the job are bare legs, clanky jewelry, see-through blouses, overteased hairdos and pants suits.

"Pantsuits are fine," Tish said, "but unless the girl has a job in the fashion field and is confident of how to dress, she may start out in a trim pantsuit and then slide into slacks, jeans, fancy tops that belong at home. And she'll look awful on the job."

Proper length in hems is discussed in the film, along with the appropriate underpinnings in relation to a woman's age and size. And weekend sportswear and at-home fashions are shown to emphasize the fact that there is a time and place for many kinds of fashion.

"The woman on the job,"

For after-five (left) the working girl might choose this polka dot blouse in a sheer voile worn with a skirt that's sashed at the waistline. For the office (center) Paris-inspired short jacket suit has the new longer length skirt, low pockets and a flowing print scarf for added chic. Weekend wrap-up (right) combines midi coat in Erwin denim with piggyback belts on the sleeves and sides, matching jean-cuts pants and a snappy red and white floral shirt. All designs from Montgomery Ward.

Vaughn's Engine Is No Longer 'Racing with Moon'

By ROGER DOUGHTY

NEW YORK — (NEA) — Vaughn Monroe is a bit too old to make it as an astronaut and that's really kind of sad. No knock on Neil Armstrong or anything, but after 30 years of "Racing With the Moon," it would have been a nice touch if Monroe had been the first guy to get there.

Monroe doesn't think it's all that tragic.

"In my era," Monroe was saying the other day, "the moon was pretty romantic property. You know, June, moon, spoon, all that kind of thing. It's a little depressing to find out it's just a lot of rocks and dust. And now that man has arrived it's bound to get polluted. I prefer to remember it the way I always thought it was."

In a way, you could say that Vaughn Monroe is alive and well and living in 1945. Sure, he's hip to what's going on in the world and he looks fit enough to flatten anybody who might be foolish enough to accuse him of being over the hill, but for Vaughn Monroe that's not where it's at. Never has been.

"I haven't got anything against message songs," he tells you, "but they're not my kind of thing. I want people to enjoy what I do without having to worry about what I'm trying to tell them. People come to see me and they know what to expect. I give them what they want."

Monroe has been giving people what they want since 1940, when he formed his first band, started making records and caught the attention of Martin Block, New York's best-known disc jockey at the time.

"Within one year we were playing the Paramount Theatre in New York," Monroe remembers, "and that was the big leagues in those days."

It all ended in 1953 when Monroe broke up the band ("TV killed the business," he says), kept active in commercials but, as far as a lot of people were concerned, dropped out of sight. He never stopped working, playing Las Vegas a lot, but a lot of people sort of forgot about him.

But here he was in New York again, working at the St. Regis, and it was almost as if somewhere along the line he had learned how to turn back the clock.

It's a Friday night and the papers carry headlines about campus disorders, how we're polluting the world to the point where we can't live here much longer—strikes, murders and chaos are the topics of discussion on the 11 o'clock news—but that's all going on outside the St. Regis.

Inside, in La Maisonette, people in their late 40s and 50s and 60s are dancing to "Balling the Jack," doing dips as they go along. A lady who looks like she must be 70 tells her husband how she never used to get tired as you dance the shag to "After You've Gone," then swing into the Charleston when the band plays "Anything Goes."

Then out comes Monroe, looking so fit that a guy sitting at ringside whispers to his wife that it couldn't have been 29 years ago that they saw him sing in Newark, and he's into "I'll Get By" and "Red Roses for a Blue Lady" and he just keeps going.

Then he says, "Here's a song we recorded in 1945, if you want to go back that far," and from the second he hits the first note of "There I've Said It Again," you can tell that everybody does.

"People ask me why I work so hard," he says later, "and I tell them that I don't. My daughters are grown and my wife and I like to travel, so I take jobs that allow us to move around. Last year we were in Europe for six weeks and I think I worked about 15 days. But I'd quit tomorrow if it weren't for the people I meet.

"They stop me after a show and tell me how they saw me 25 years ago in Cleveland or how one of my records was 'their song' and it's the nicest feeling in the world. If they ever stopped doing that I'd be so hurt that I wouldn't be able to go out there and sing. That's what keeps me going, but when I need it, I take a rest."

After all those years of "Racing With the Moon" you have to figure he deserves it.

Plant, Plant, Plant
City people can help discourage pollution by planting lawns and ornamentals. Here is why:
Carbon monoxide comes from incomplete burning of organic compounds, one source being automobile exhaust. Monoxide buildup is prevented through quick mixing into fresh, oxygenated air. Oxygen enrichment comes from green vegetation, which traps carbon dioxide from the atmosphere and releases oxygen in its place.

QUICK QUIZ

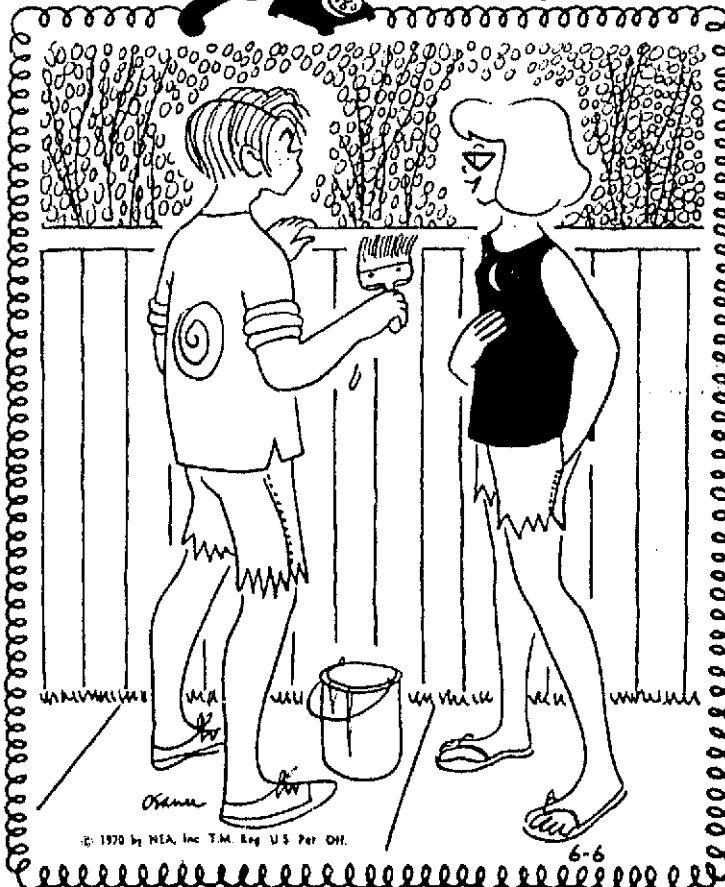

Q—Are penguins found near the equator?
A—In western South America, which is washed by the cool waters of the Humboldt Current, penguins reach Peru and the Galapagos Islands.
Q—Are porcupines born with their quills?
A—Porcupines come into the world well-developed and have soft, flexible spines. They are already quite dangerous at the end of 10 days.

Germany Wins Soccer Cup Game

NEW YORK (AP) — Hans Lindemann's goal with 12 minutes gone in the second half gave West Germany's Eintracht-Frankfurt a 1-0 victory over A.C. Milan of Italy in the Apollo Friendship Soccer Cup game at Randall's Island Friday night.

Flood Case Challenge to System

NEW YORK (AP) — The Curt Flood case has reached the seventh-inning stretch with possibly four more witnesses, including controversial former clubowner Bill Veck, scheduled to take the witness stand next week.

Veck, a one-time owner of the Cleveland Indians and Chicago White Sox, is on the lineup card being carried about by Flood's attorneys, but at the moment there is still some question about whether he will be sent up to hit.

If Veck were to testify, he likely would do so Wednesday, closing out the case in which Flood has brought a $3 million antitrust challenge to the legality of baseball's reserve system.

According to the timetable established by the attorneys, baseball will call its last defense witness, an economist, when the case resumes Monday and then Flood's lawyers will call Marvin Miller, executive director of the Players' Association, and Dick Moss, its attorney, as rebuttal witnesses.

The defendants' club owners called John Gaherin, their labor relations' negotiator, as their 10th witness Friday. He testified that the owners had negotiated in good faith in an attempt to reach agreement with the Players' Association on modifying the reserve system.

Gaherin pointed out that the owners had recognized their obligation to bargain collectively on the issue during 1967 and had done so in several meetings with the Players Association before institution of Flood's suit halted proceedings.

Gaherin said the Players Association had first made specific recommendations in August last year and said the owners "were shocked by the extent of the proposals" because of the "obvious harm they would do to baseball."

He said those proposals included a provision for a baseball player to gain free agent status after three years service; a reduction in the number of players a team could control; a salary arbitration procedure, and a provision that no trade could be made without a player's consent.

Garrett is Changing Ball Game

By JACK HAND
Associated Press Sports Writer
NEW YORK (AP) — Mike Garrett's status as a potential professional baseball player, after helping Kansas City win the Super Bowl, was the most startling development of baseball's annual summer free agent draft.

Al Campanis, general manager of the Los Angeles Dodgers, startled the draft meeting Friday by announcing he was selecting the negotiation rights to Garrett on behalf of the Dodgers' Bakersfield, Calif., farm in the California League.

Garrett, an outfielder, played baseball in his college days at Southern California, prompting the Dodgers to draft him for baseball at the time. However, a five-year contract with the Kansas City Chiefs, reportedly for $450,000, was too attractive

Rookie Wins Debut Game On 5-Hitter

By HERSCHEL NISSEN
Associated Press Sports Writer
Nine years ago, Bert Blyleven knew nothing about the Little League. Today, the American League knows all about Bert Blyleven.

"He's everything people said he was," said Washington slugger Frank Howard after the Senators came out on the short end of a 2-1 score against the Minnesota Twins Friday night in Blyleven's major league debut.

The 19-year-old right-hander, called up from the American Association earlier this week to replace the injured Luis Tiant, hurled seven innings and allowed five hits. The only run came on Lee Maye's leadoff homer.

"I'm glad it happened that way," said Blyleven. "You know, you get the nervousness out of your system, but I would have liked to strike him out. I imagine Mr. Rigney and the rest of them got nervous with that home run."

Elsewhere in the AL, Baltimore edged Milwaukee 3-2, the New York Yankees ripped the Chicago White Sox 10-1, California nipped Cleveland 2-1, Oakland downed Detroit 4-2 and Boston beat Kansas City 4-2.

In National League play, Cincinnati tripped the New York Mets 5-4 in a rain-shortened eight-inning game, the Chicago Cubs outslugged San Francisco 12-8, Montreal got by Atlanta 3-2, Pittsburgh blanked Los Angeles 3-0, San Diego defeated St. Louis 3-2 and Houston turned back Philadelphia 8-7 in 11 innings.

The road to the majors for Ricalbert Blyleven began in Zeist, Holland, where he was born. The family moved to Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada, in 1953 and to southern California in 1957, where Blyleven starred at Garden Grove High.

Blyleven was the Twins' third choice in the free-agent draft last June and went on to post a 7-2 record in two rookie leagues and a sensational 8-0 mark in the Florida Instructional League.

"What can I say about him," raved manager Bill Rigney, who calls Blyleven "The Baby." "He's the best looking prospect I've seen. I've got to rate him with all the real young players that I've ever looked at. He's just beautiful."

The Twins scored in the first off loser Casey Cox when Cesar Tovar walked, stole second and came around on Tony Oliva's single. They broke the tie in the fifth on Frank Quilici's infield hit, Blyleven's sacrifice and a single by Tovar. Ron Perranoski preserved Blyleven's victory.

Merv Rettenmund broke a 1-1 tie in the fourth inning with his fifth home run and Ellie Hendrick's fifth-inning homer, his third, was the winner as the Orioles nipped the Brewers, Dave McNally, with help from Eddie Watt in the eighth, became the AL's first nine-game winner.

Bobby Murcer drove in three runs with two homers and a double and Gene Michael also knocked three runs across as the Yankees routed Chicago, Roy White also homered as Mel Stottlemyre scattered five hits in posting his first complete-game victory.

Oakland took advantage of a two-out throwing error by pitcher Earl Wilson to push across four unearned runs in the sixth inning and beat the Tigers. Wilson knocked down Felipe Alou's hard bouncer, then threw low past first as Bert Campaneris scored all the way from first and Alou wound up on third.

Joe Rudi's bloop single tied the score and, after a walk to Sal Bando, Don Mincher and Frank Fernandez singled runs home.

Billy Cowan's fourth-inning homer, his first of the season, provided the margin of victory as the Angels and Clyde Wright, 8-3, edged the Indians. The only Cleveland run was Vada Pinson's 200th career homer in the first.

Carl Yastrzemski's two-run homer in the fifth boosted the Red Sox past the Royals. Bob Oliver homered for Kansas City, to turn down. The former Heisman Trophy winner gained over 1,000 yards for the Chiefs in 1967 and scored in the Super Bowl victory over Minnesota.

At the age of 28, the 5-foot-9 Garrett told the Associated Press Friday night, "I intend to play baseball and will negotiate with the Dodgers."

He has called a news conference for Monday afternoon to explain his decision to quit football after the 1971 season when his contract expires.

WHEELING IT

By BOB COCHNAR

NEW YORK — (NEA) — Your traditional brand of sportswriter is generally shocked when confronted with a bloke who baldly states that he finds baseball excruciatingly dull.

The writer, affronted, may explain pompously (as he would to a child who finds flowers confusing) that the game can't be properly appreciated unless the fine points are known. The waggle of a bat, the position of a shortstop, the direction of the wind, the slight juggling of a plug of tobacco in the pitcher's mouth — all contribute to an understanding of the sport.

And the same writer, still the traditionalist, tends to consider motor racing an aberration fit only for juiced-up crackpots, effete snobs and mentally deficient sadists. The sport, to him, is also a bore after the first lap or so.

It is difficult to determine if Melvin Durslag, a Los Angeles sportswriter, is made of traditional stuff, but in a recent issue of TV Guide he quite clearly exhibits a wholesome ignorance of a sport which is now ranked sixth in national sports readership interest, according to a wire service survey.

Durslag writes that "the argument against racing is SAIGON (AP) — A Viet Cong lieutenant colonel said today that he saw 16 Chinese Communist advisers assisting in the planning of the Communist Command's 1968 Tet offensive.

Lt. Col. Nguyen Van Nang, who surrendered to government troops May 20 about 35 miles west of Saigon, said he saw the Chinese "every time" he met with the general staff of the Communist Command before the offensive.

Speaking through a South Vietnamese military interpreter, the thin, 46-year-old man also told a news conference: "The Communist Command since 1969 has learned of most U.S. B52 raids in South Vietnam as much as 24 hours in advance by monitoring allied military radio networks."

A countrywide Communist offensive scheduled to start in May, including ground attacks on towns and cities, was called off partly because of the allied drives into Cambodia.

All allied military operations have been known by the Communist Command from one to four days before they began, including the operation in Cambodia.

He heard that a number of U.S. soldiers had been captured, taken to Communist Command headquarters and "treated well" there. He said he had never seen them, and he did not say when they were captured.

Nang said he was deputy commander for an area including one Saigon precinct and seven districts just west of the city. He said he led troops that took part in the Tet offensive in February 1968 and the May 1968 offensive.

irrefutable. It kills and maims. It also encourages speed at a time the nation has never been more safety-minded on the roads. This is especially the case with stock-car races. When kids old enough to drive watch them on the tube, are they inspired to get out and 'floor' their V-8s?

A good question, perhaps, to which neither Durslag nor anybody else has the answer. Further, his broad-brush, Agnewistic statement that "racing kills and maims" ought to be altered to "can kill and maim," as can boxing, hockey and football.

Durslag also assumes that boredom inevitably sets in "after 30 minutes, particularly if a driver gets in front." A driver is usually always in front (that's the way racing is), but there are races within races which merit watching. Will No. 5 get a round No. 4? And what's happening in the back of the pack?

There are, like baseball, the fine points to consider. How does a driver take a particular turn? Is the car just out of a pit stop really screaming around the track to make up time? Is he moving faster and with more skill than the leader?

And what about the drivers? What kind of intense discipline must they have to negotiate through speeding traffic, around turns on the edge of adhesion? Are we watching brute, flat-out speed or cautious control? As Grand Prix driver Juan Fangio once said, "I always drive slow enough to win."

Durslag suggests that "the solution to the boredom problem in auto racing is shorter events. For today's cars, besides, a 500-mile race may be too long. We recall a while back that only 6 of the 33 starters finished at Indianapolis. We have suggested to the management there the (Kentucky) Derby distance of a mile and a quarter. When 15 horses start in the Derby 15 usually finish."

This is, of course, patent nonsense. One of the thrills of racing is not knowing who will finish. Even the leader can be frustrated with a fouled plug. Racing is that unpredictable.

The best solution to the "boredom problem" is to discover what racing is all about.

Not everybody is going to consider racing the greatest spectacle ever created by contemporary man; some people are nutty about curling and log-rolling contests. But as long as the automobile remains an important part of the American experience, racing will be here, gaining more friends and offering the spectator an exhilarating performance of speed, skill and absolute control.

Ignore Protests on Game's Violence

By IRA BERKOW

NEA Sports Editor

NEW YORK — (NEA) — So far, not a single professional football coach has burned his draft list in protest of the bruising nature of the game.

Not one of the 26 head coaches in the National Football League has hung up his earphones, ripped up his playbook or flung a blackboard eraser as a symbol of his radicalization.

Nor have any of them, from Vince Lombardi to John Madden, threatened to join a commune, a monastery or the SDS if one more drop of blood is spilled in the pursuit of a championship.

Football coaches, then, remain a constant, and still prefer Sunday violence, brutality, bone-crushings to wearing flowers in the hair.

Not so some of their players, or ex-players. Dave Meggysy, seven-year linebacker for the St. Louis Cardinals, has quit because football "represents an ideology of violence." He added that "coaches talk of the need of disciplpline. What they really mean is obedience . . . Blind obedience to authority lends itself to the most fascistic type of mentality."

Chip Oliver, two-year linebacker with the Oakland Raiders, gave up football because he said it was "dehumanizing" and joined a commune.

Last December, a teammate of Meggysy's, reserve offensive guard Rick Sortun, quit, saying pro football was part of the establishment, and he wanted no part of it.

"These (Olivers, Meggysys, Sortuns) are just isolated cases," said Washington Redskins coach Lombardi.

"If they want to wear bellbottoms, let 'em join the Navy," said Atlanta Falcon coach Norm van Brocklin.

"Meggysy said, 'Come the revolution, football will be obsolete.' I don't know when the revolution is coming, but when it gets here I want the football players on my side," said Detroit Lion coach Joe Schmidt.

When the topic was broached to New York Giant coach Alex Webster, he said, "I think I'll have another drink."

Oliver's coach, John Madden, was a bit befuddled by it all.

"Chip is an extremely deep kid, and he said he wants to be free to do what he wants to do. But he loved the game of football. Yes, we did call him General Loose Wire, but a lot of us have been called that—maybe not in those precise words."

Meggysy's coach, Charlie Winner, said, "The thing I can't understand is that Dave was a real good hitter, and I thought he liked contact."

"Dave said that football was not a 'beautiful experience.' But I think all sports are. I mean, the competition and skills involved help us learn about life, help us understand that we can attain a goal by striving toward it with hard work. And that we fight for a common purpose."

"And football is also important to our society because it offers a great release from our pent-up emotions. A spectator yells for his team, boos the coach and comes home on Sunday night absolutely beat because he let his frustrations out at the game."

But the spectator, unlike the player, also comes home in one piece—without the risk of a mangled knee, a dislocated shoulder or a cracked vertebrae, unless he had fallen out of the stands after too many beers.

Natural Disasters

Every storm that wreaks destruction, as a tornado so awesomely did in Lubbock, Tex., is a reminder that man remains almost powerless against the unfashioned forces of nature. Our sophisticated technology, for all the wonders it performs, has not yet fashioned effective weapons to be used in combat against earthquake, wind and tidal wave.

Our warning systems have improved; we know further in advance, and more accurately when and where a disastrous force will strike. We also have learned something about building disaster-resistant structures. Yet in essence modern man does pretty much what his primitive forebears did: he flees, or he huddles in his "cave" and sits it out.

Some day, in the epic struggle to master his environment, man will learn to safeguard himself and his works against natural disasters. If he ever learns to get along without war, perhaps he will have the time and resources to get at it. — West Point (Miss.) Daily Times Leader

It Makes Sense

It has been silly to claim as many have, that a mob has a "right" to take over the streets. There is a right of peaceable assembly, but not necessarily in the streets to the inconvenience and danger of others. The Supreme Court has rightly upheld the authority of local officials to prevent street assemblies in emergency conditions.

The right of assembly does not include the right to threaten or to disrupt or to take over use of public property from others. — Chattanooga (Tenn.) News-Free Press

Peruvians Scared by New Tremors

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Hungry, cold and frightened by aftershocks in the wake of last Sunday's catastrophic earthquake, hundreds of villagers have abandoned hope of rescue and have begun walking over the Andes seeking aid.

A Peruvian officer just back from the 600-mile stretch of coastline and mountain area hit by the quake said Thursday night: "It could turn into a mass exodus of those people still alive and able to move on foot."

The officer said the refugees are beginning to reach villages on the coastal side of the Andes after long walks through treacherous mountain passes more than 10,000 feet high.

Some of the displaced peasants told of leaving elderly and more seriously injured survivors in the care of young people who knew a little first aid.

The officer said he was told that only 500 persons remain in the town of Yungay, which had a population of 20,000 before the quake. The city was virtually wiped off the map, but some 2,500 survivors reportedly were spotted Wednesday on high ground nearby.

Yungay is in the Huaylas Canyon, a narrow valley between two Andean ranges in northwest Peru. Most of the 30,000 persons feared dead in the quake lived in towns, and villages along the canyon's 80-mile length.

Officials said a whole side of 22,205-foot Mt. Huascaran, South America's eighth tallest peak, is believed to have crumbled away, pouring down thousands of tons of rocks, ice and mud onto Yungay.

The quake also burst the sides of lakes in the mountains, causing tons of water to crash down on villages below. The narrow road along the canyon floor is blocked along with all roads leading into the canyon from mountain passes.

The Caraz airstrip, the only one in the canyon, was washed away, and small helicopters have been the only means of getting aid to survivors. Paratroopers were dropped into the quake zone Wednesday to build another small strip near Huaraz.

Men of Today Are on a Kick Displaying Fancy Wearing Apparel

By MARY ANITA LASETER
Star Feature Writer

He was a Fancy Dan, his name was George, but people called him Beau. He would have been so pleased with the increased interest in fashion that men of today are displaying with their choice of a wider range of colors and materials for their apparel.

By now you have probably guessed that we are speaking of the English man of fashion known as Beau Brummell. He was born George Bryan Brummell in London June 7, 1778. His father was a private secretary to a Lord North, and subsequently high sheriff of Berkshire. His grandfather was a shopkeeper in the parish of St. James, who rented lodgings to the aristocracy. Not an impressive background, you say?

Maybe not, but he was associating with people who were of the upper echelon of society. That probably accounts for the fact that from his early years George Brummell paid great attention to his dress. He went to school at Eton and was called Buck Brummell by his classmates and then on to Oxford, but even with the boyish nickname, Buck, he maintained his reputation as a fastidious dresser.

His friendship with the Prince of Wales who later became King George IV began at Eton. The monarch gave him a commission in his own regiment, and Brummell advanced to the rank of captain before leaving the service. He came into a small fortune about his time and set up bachelor quarters in Mayfair, where he retained his friendship with the Prince of Wales and his good taste in the world of men's fashions.

For a time, at least, gambling and a sharp tongue were his downfall. His fortune was lost through gambling and extravagance, and his friendship with the Prince was ended after hasty words by Beau. He maintained his place in society even after the quarrel, but the standing was on shaky ground. His popularity began to decline. And creditors began closing in. He fled to Calais, France, and struggled on in debt for 14 years. He must have kept some of his charm, for he managed to become British consul at Caen, France in 1832. This lasted only 3 years before he was put into debtors' prison. Though he was rescued from prison by friends who provided him a small income, he had several attacks of illness over the next few years and died at a charitable asylum in Caen in 1840.

Do clothes make the man? We aren't inclined to think so, but it is certainly true that the manner in which they are worn makes a difference. Take Beau Brummell, for example. While he was the "cock of the walk," he was always neat, clean, and well groomed. But when troubles of various kinds descended on him, he let his personal appearance become slovenly and dirty. People of every generation are inclined to be the same way.

Tomorrow, June 7, is the birthday of Beau Brummell. Fortunately, his name calls to mind only his happier times, for nearly 200 years after his birth, it still evokes in the minds of all a gentleman attired in elegant manner with a smile on his face and a fancy cane in his hand.

Market Slump Takes Toll in Corporations

NEW YORK (AP) — The recent 18-month slump in the stock market has taken its toll among many corporate financing plans.

A number of big companies have had to put off planned mergers and acquisitions. Others have postponed expansion plans. Many private companies have had to delay their plans to go public.

All give the same reasons: Stock shares are not worth as much as they used to be and the cost of borrowing money has never been higher.

"The cost of money is just extremely high now and I see no immediate change," says Barry Thors, manager of the syndicate division of Blair & Co., a brokerage firm. "It doesn't matter whether a company tries to do it by equity or stock financing, debt or bond financing—it's just difficult to raise money."

Generally companies raise money by issuing new shares of stock. How much they get depends on what the individual share is worth. Over the past 18 months stock prices on the New York Stock Exchange alone have been cut back by more than $160 billion.

The other alternative is to go to the bond market where a company can sell a bond, similar to an IOU, on which they pay interest. However, so many companies have gone this route because of sinking stock values that already high interest rates have risen even higher.

Witness the 10 per cent interest Boise Cascade Corp., a manufacturer of lumber and paper products, had to pay in May in order to sell its $75-million bond issue. Or the 9 1/2 per cent Dallas Power & Light had to pay to float its $30-million bond offering in May.

A Younger Selective Service Look

By STAN BENJAMIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Draft Director Curtis W. Tarr, trying to make the Selective Service look younger, has asked aging members of his department to resign.

Although the request was aimed specifically at members of the Selective Service's national and state headquarters, a high-ranking draft official said Tarr's policy could be viewed as a strong hint to elderly state directors as well.

But only one—Henry M. Gross of Pennsylvania, who at 85 is the oldest state director of all—has indicated he will quit, but not until the end of the year.

Although state directors take their orders from Tarr, they owe their appointments to state governors. Tarr is thus faced with the diplomatic problem of easing some of them out, without offending the governors.

President Nixon's appointment of the 45-year-old Tarr to replace Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, 76, as draft director last March was only the beginning of a campaign to lower the age of the Selective Service System.

Tarr quickly applied the principle to his national headquarters, asking the resignation of about 10 per cent of his 236 staff members—civilians over 70 years old and military personnel who have either reached age 60 or are eligible for their maximum retirement benefits.

Tarr recently began applying the same standards to state headquarters with a series of letters asking individuals—or asking their state directors to ask them—to resign.

State directors have requested a few exceptions, but so far Tarr has turned them all down. An official said about 58 "military types" out of some 340 in state headquarters were expected to resign by the end of this year, including 12 who would have retired anyway.

The letters to state directors usually cite "the desires of the President" to make the draft "more responsive and understandable to the youth of the nation."

After asking for the resignation of a specified individual, the Tarr letter concludes: "In submitting a request for his replacement to me for consideration, I would suggest that a young man be considered, one who could present the image of being in tune with the youth of today and their problems."

Such letters actually have gone to only about 16 of the 56 state and other jurisdictional directors, but word generally travels fast through Selective Service's active grapevine.

Over Billion In Contracts Are Awarded

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon has taken a major step toward development of the B1, a strategic bomber designed to sweep in under enemy radar and fire nuclear-tipped missiles.

Contracts totaling nearly $1.8 billion were awarded Friday to North American Rockwell Co. and General Electric to design, develop and test the plane—the first new long range bomber since the B52 and B58 were developed in the early 1950s.

The Air Force envisions a fleet of 200 to 300 planes if the project is given the go-ahead.

Air Force Secretary Robert Seamans Jr. emphasized Friday that production of the B1 is a long way off and the contracts were only for research, development and testing. This was viewed by some as an effort to blunt expected criticism in Congress against spending huge sums for new weapons.

Included in the Air Force's announcement Friday was a memorandum from Deputy Secretary of Defense David M. Packard stressing "it will be several years before a production decision is made."

"Factors to be considered... include the progress and success of the engineering development program, the progress of the SALT (Strategic Arms Limitation Talks) talks (with Russia) and the relationship of this program to these talks," Packard said.

North American Rockwell of El Segundo, Calif., was awarded a $1,350,814,739 engineering and design contract with a target profit of nearly $16 million to build five B1 prototypes and two ground air test air frames. General Electric of Evendale, Ohio, will design and build 40 jet engines at an estimated cost of $406,654,000. GE's target profit is figured at $30 million.

Rep. Thomas Pelly, R-Wash., said in a telegram to Secretary of Defense Melvin Laird that the Boeing Co. had submitted a proposal for a superior bomber that would cost less money.

The Air Force has been trying to win approval for a new advanced strategic bomber since 1964 to replace its aging flock of high altitude B52s, of which about 550 still are in use.

The B1 would carry a crew of four and fly at more than 1,500 miles per hour.

"Uncle Mac" Is Candidate For Governor

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — James "Uncle Mac" MacKrell, 67, who made audacious political bids two decades ago, burst back into the picture Friday when he filed for the Republican gubernatorial nomination.

MacKrell, a former radio evangelist, arrived unannounced and filed, breaking his ties with the Democratic party in which he campaigned for governor in 1948.

"We just don't have a Democratic party as I knew it 22 years ago," MacKrell said when asked why he switched. "I don't see any hope whatever."

MacKrell ran third in a seven-man primary won by Sid McMann 22 years ago. In 1950, MacKrell finished second in a field of nine in the Democratic race for lieutenant governor.

He became the second person to file for the GOP nomination for governor. Lester L. Gibbs, 64, of North Little Rock filed earlier this week. MacKrell is pastor of a North Little Rock church.

A native of Houston, Tex., MacKrell worked for Radio Station KLRB at Little Rock from 1930 to 1950, holding several positions, and is best known for his radio evangelism. He is executive director of Cooperative Church - Builders Inc. of North Little Rock.

MacKrell said he would explain his candidacy more thoroughly Monday at a 2 p.m. news conference.

Negro Ministers Commend Warren

WARREN, Ark. (AP) — Three Warren ministers, all Negroes, have written an open letter to school officials here commending them for the way the Warren schools were totally integrated last year.

The signers were the Rev. George T. Blackman, minister of the Bethel AME Church; the Rev. E. E. Russ, minister of the Mount Carmel Baptist Church; and the Rev. M. T. Easter, minister of the Union Hill Baptist Church.

The first eight grades of the Warren schools were utilized last September and the final four grades in January under federal court orders.

The district has about 1,500 white and about 1,000 blacks.

Activists Are Convicted In Records Case

CHICAGO (AP) — Ten anti-war activists have been convicted in U.S. District Court of destroying thousands of draft records in a raid on a Selective Service office.

All were convicted on all four counts of the indictment in a verdict returned Friday by a jury of seven men and five women. The maximum penalty is 23 years in prison and fines totaling $32,000. Sentencing is scheduled Tuesday.

Three of the defendants were not present to hear the verdict. They disappeared near the end of the five week trial, and warrants have been issued for their arrest.

Judge Edwin A. Robson revoked the bonds of the seven defendants who were in court. He said they are a menace to the community and he would be negligent in his duties if he allowed them to remain at large "to wreak the same havoc" elsewhere in the nation.

It is only a step from burning draft records to burning buildings, the judge said in denying defense motions that the seven remain free on bond pending sentencing. The defendants' actions amounted to anarchy, he said.

Bonds for the other defendants were revoked when they disappeared.

The defendants admitted during the trial that they took part in the raid on a complex of draft offices and destroyed records by pouring paint on them and dumping them into a bonfire.

But an attorney for four defendants argued that his clients were innocent on grounds they were "culturally insane" because their views on Vietnam and racism differ from those of the majority of Americans.

In his instructions to the jury, however, Judge Robson said that an individual's political beliefs are no basis for disobeying the law.

The four defendants represented by attorney Frank Oliver were examined by a psychiatrist who testified for the prosecution that all four were mentally sound and able to tell the difference between right and wrong at the time of the raid.

The four were the Rev. Nicholas J. Riddell, 40, of Milwaukee, a Carmelite priest; Linda J. Quint, 22, of Chicago; and Edward Gargan, 19, and William Durkin, 20, both of Milwaukee.

They were among 18 persons arrested May 25, 1969, during the raid on a southwest side Selective Service office. Three of the 18 were dismissed because they were newsmen observing the demonstrations.

Four of the defendants failed to appear when the trial began and they were served from the proceeding.

One of the remaining 11, Edward Hoffmann, 32, Iowa City, Iowa, was ruled mentally unfit to stand trial after a psychiatrist testified he showed signs of a schizoid personality.

One of the convicted defendants, Frederick J. Chase, 26, Detroit, has been sentenced to 27 days in jail for contempt for repeatedly refusing to rise when the judge and jury entered the courtroom.

North Korea Claim False Says Navy

By MARK KURAMITSU
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP) — North Korea claims it sank a "heavily armed" U.S. spy ship in the Yellow Sea, but the U.S. Navy has denied the charge, saying it has no ships operating in the area.

South Korea announced Friday that one of its vessels, on a routine mission to prevent South Korean fishing boats from straying north of the border, was attacked by two North Korean patrol boats and towed off toward the north. North Korea issued its claim later in the day, and there was speculation the two Korean governments were referring to the same incident.

North Korea's official Korean Central News Agency said an American spy ship "intruded deep into the coastal waters" about 11:30 p.m. Friday. "Officers and men of the navy of the Korean People's army... instantly sent to the bottom of the sea the enemy's armed spy ship," the broadcast said.

The Navy reported in a statement issued in Washington: "The U.S. Navy had no ships of any kind operating in that area."

The North Korean dispatch said the ship was sunk off Haeju, about 50 miles south of Pyongyang, the North Korean capital.

The South Korean Defense Ministry said its boat was accosted by two North Korean vessels just south of the seaward extension of the Demilitarized Zone, about 70 miles west of the South Korean capital of Seoul.

The location given by the North Koreans would put the ship slightly north of the DMZ, and that given by the South Koreans would put it south of the line.

South Korean Brig. Gen. called the seizure a "premeditated attack." He did not say whether fire was returned or if there were casualties. There was no word on the condition of the crew.

But the English-language Korea Times reported without attribution that the South Korean boat returned fire with a 50mm machine gun until its engines stalled. The paper said it was believed the South Korean boat suffered heavy damage and that there were casualties among her crew. It added that a number of South Korean fighter jets were called to the scene, but were too late to intercept the North Koreans before they tugged the stricken craft north of the DMZ.

South Korean sources said that since North Korea claimed it sank the boat, it was possible that the South Korean vessel, heavily damaged in the sea battle, sank while being towed north.

Post Office for Holly Grove

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Post Office Department has awarded a contract to Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Watson of North Little Rock for construction of a $51,600 Post Office at Holly Grove by February 1971. Sen. John L. McClellan, D-Ark., said Thursday.
